Where is Chiang Mai Thailand?

Chiang Mai is the largest city in Northern Thailand, situated about 700 kilometres (435 miles) north of Bangkok. The city sits 300 metres above sea level in a valley surrounded by mountains. Chiang Mai is centred around the old town which is encircled by a moat. Many of Chiang Mai's most famous sights and things to do can be found here.

Is Chiang Mai Thailand's rose of the north?

There's so much more to Chiang Mai, Thailand's Rose of the North, than first meets the eye. Though firmly on the Thai travel circuit, Chiang Mai often comes in third for visitors determined to see Bangkok before immediately heading south to the tropical islands. Those who trek north, however, are certainly rewarded.

How do I get to Chiang Mai?

In order to get to Chiang Mai, first, you will have to get to Bangkok, the capital city of Thailand. Thankfully, Bangkok is a large hub in the region, so you should have no trouble finding a flight from your home country to Suvarnabhumi International Airport or Don Muang International Airport (budget airlines only), Thailand.

Is Chiang Mai a must-visit city?

Nestled in northern Thailand's misty mountains, Chiang Mai is a must-visit city where you can catch a glimpse of Thailand before it became a bustling tourist destination. Founded in 1296, Chiang Mai served as the new capital of the Lanna Kingdom.
